That's all there is to it. The content of the string, that is, the human readable characters, didn't change, but it's now a valid UTF-32 string. If you keep treating it as UTF-32, there's no problem with garbled characters. As discussed at the very beginning though, not all encoding schemes can represent all characters. It's not possible to encode the character "□" in any encoding scheme ...

Plain text and rich text. Files that contain markup or other meta-data are generally considered plain-text, as long as the entirety remains in directly human-readable form (as in HTML, XML, and so on (as Coombs, Renear, and DeRose argue, punctuation is itself markup). The use of plain text rather than bit-streams to express markup, enables files to survive much better "in the wild", in part by ...
